[2 ONE 5] CREATIVE

Security documentation and situational evaluation for a design firm doing work with many security-conscious vendors

Case Study: Security Documentation

Problem:

- [2 one 5] creative is a Philadelphia and New York based web design firm that has many high profile clients.
- In the last few years, as companies have become more sensitive to security and the level of security at their vendors, those vendors realize the importance of a formal information security program
- [2 one 5] was facing this challenge, as many of their high profile clients, like Comcast, were asking them to answer complex security questionnaires, to which they had little to no answers.
- [2 one 5] sought the help of MMSD to validate all of their security posture, to make specific recommendations for improvement, and to develop a baseline set of security documents for the company to use to build a formal information security program.

Case Study: Security Documentation

MMSD provided the following services:

1. A complete vulnerability scan of their local network, uncovering not necessarily insecure but definitely repetitive and inefficient activities on their network.
2. An analysis of their storage infrastructure, with specific recommendations for improvement in security, reliability, and performance.
3. A full set of security documents that helped them to pass the security audit, with recommendations on how to meet specific security standards:
  1. Business Continuity Plan
  2. Info Security Requirements for Suppliers
  3. Disaster Recovery Plan
  4. Acceptable Use Policy
  5. Cryptography Policy
  6. Data Classification Policy
  7. Identity Access Management Policy
  8. Physical Access Policy... and more
